

Arts Council of Ireland

Self-Audit of Child Protection and Welfare Policies and Procedures

Who this audit is for

This audit is for all organisations or groups who:

- work with children
- provide activities and services to children

In this audit, we will use the term 'organisation' when we refer to organisations or groups.

This audit will confirm that the organisation's policies and procedures comply with legislation such as the Children First Act 2015 and guidelines such as the Children First National Guidance for Child Protection and Welfare 2017.

You must review your documents until you are providing a compliant self-audit, which means that the organisation's policies and procedures follow the legislation and guidelines. Access to your funding or grant-aid from the Arts Council depends on this.

How to fill it out

Please read through the questions before you begin. Each question must be indicated by a 'Yes' or 'No'.

Answering with a 'No' is only acceptable for questions 1, 8 and 9, if the question does not apply to your organisation.

How to include it: the audit has advice on what to include in Child Protection and Welfare Policies and Procedure documents and in what section to include it. This can assist an organisation if it creating new policies and procedures.

If the organisation already has policies and procedures, the information may be in a different place in the documentation. If the information is not in the documents, you will need to add it in so that the self-audit can be completed.

If there is an instance where the organisation cannot comply with a certain question contact the Arts Council by emailing safeguarding@artscouncil.ie.

The rights of the Arts Council

The Arts Council has the right to request copies of documents, records or other information mentioned in the questions. If the organisation fails to provide this information, it may have an impact on future funding or grant-aid.

Any information that the Arts Council asks for should prove that:

- the organisation is complying with relevant legal and national guidance
- the answers to the questions in this self-audit are true

Arts Council funding requires a fully compliant self-audit questionnaire to be submitted every two years, unless an important change has been made to legislation or national guidance during that time.
